- 6 - KURDISH HUMAN RIGHTS PROJECT
Letter from the Director and Chairman

Dear Friends,

In the struggle for the recognition of human rights in the Kurdish regions, we cannot recall a time where resolution of the Kurdish question has so dominated the international agenda.

Of course, it does not feature as prominently as it ought to, given the suffering endured by all too many people and the centrality of discrimination and human rights abuse to the region’s instability. Nonetheless, we must recognise the progress made.

The trial of Saddam Hussein and other former Ba’athist officials for genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity provides an opportunity for justice for victims and survivors of the former regime although we are disappointed that crimes against Kurds have been excluded from the indictment for political reasons. More positively, in the new Iraq, Kurds have benefitted from enhanced recognition of their autonomy in the north and protection of their culture and of their language — a particularly important reversal of the former regime’s Arabisation policy.

In Turkey, the situation has considerably improved from when we started our work there back in 1992 — a time when villages were routinely being burned and evacuated by security forces and thousands of Kurds were killed or simply disappeared. It is still shocking to remember the killings of young newspaper boys, in reprisal simply for delivering Kurdish-language newspapers. The images of torture beatings received by women and children and mutilated corpses still remain with us.

While the EU accession process has undoubtedly harnessed positive change in Turkey, institutions guaranteeing human rights, minority rights and democracy are not yet secure. We are gravely concerned at evidence of deteriorating protection of human rights over the year, combined with the renewal of armed conflict in the southeast. Since 2004, according to information we have received at least 550 people on both sides of the conflict are estimated to have died.

Elsewhere, nobody yet knows the full humanitarian cost of the war in Iraq or of its fall-out in the region. Authorities in Iran and Syria — disturbed by the increasing influence of the Kurds in Iraq — have increased repression of the Kurds within their borders. This trend shows no sign of abating.

As this report shows, this has been a year with considerable challenges, not least those faced by the communities and partner organisations with whom we work. We are most indebted, of course, to them for continuing to work in often hostile circumstances out of loyalty to human rights and to our mission.
A major challenge underpinning all our activities this year has been the ongoing implementation of a large-scale organisational restructure, the result of an 18-month feasibility study which concluded in 2004. When fully implemented, our capacity to respond to the many diverse groups seeking our help will be enhanced many times over. Our move to larger office premises will undoubtedly bring benefits over the coming year.

One of the year’s highest points was collecting the Sigrid Rausing Trust Award for Leadership in Minority and Indigenous Rights. We were deeply honoured to be described as having changed the landscape for the world’s 28 million Kurds, and to collect an award of £100,000 given only to those organisations the Trust felt had shown outstanding leadership in international human rights. The award will allow us to strengthen the organisation institutionally.

We were also delighted to see several of our friends and colleagues acknowledged during the year. We congratulate our new board member Ed Grieves on his Young Barrister of the Year Award from the Legal Aid Practitioners Group, and our patron Harold Pinter on receiving the prestigious Nobel Peace Prize. Both were well deserved.

We would like to take this opportunity to thank those on our board of patrons, directors, advisory group, legal team and staff. Our structure is crucial to our ability to provide a comprehensive response to human rights abuse throughout an enormous geographic area, with a relatively small staff size and minimal overheads. This year we welcomed Tertia Bailey, Rachel Bernu, Peter Carter QC, Andrew Collender QC, Patrick Doris, Ed Grieves, Mustafa Gundogdu, Mark Hinsworth, Bridget Hughes, Mary Hughes, Anna Irvin, Michael Ivers, Stuart Kerr, Bill McGivern, Eric Metcalfe, Clarissa O’Callaghan, Folake Ogundele, Margaret Owen, Sajjad Nabi, Rajesh Kumar Rai, Paul Richmond, Paul Troop, Catriona Vine and Joanna Wood, although several were known to us previously in other capacities. We also thank our many excellent volunteers and interns, without whom we simply could not function.

Finally, as a charity, we owe an enormous debt of gratitude to our funders and donors, whose generous support makes all this possible. Our supporters not only help protect the lives of 30 million people, but also contribute to the advancement of human rights on a global level. We will continue fighting injustice within a human rights framework for as long as it continues. Your support – whether moral, practical or financial – is critical to realising our mission: a future where discrimination and conflict have been overcome, and all people live in dignity and security.

Kerim Yildiz       Mark Muller
Executive Director       Chairman

“This has been a year with considerable challenges, not least those faced by the communities and partner organisations with whom we work.”
Who we are

Kurdish Human Rights Project (KHRP) is the only human rights non-governmental organisation working consistently in the Kurdish regions that is completely independent of political affiliation. Founded in London in 1992, we are a registered charity and our supporters include Kurds and non-Kurds.

Our position in the international human rights arena is unique because of:

• Our strong links into local communities in the Kurdish regions, making us well placed to monitor, evaluate and comment upon policies

• The high levels of public trust and confidence we command mean that we are well placed to offer alternative ways of engaging with public policy debates and the process of democracy in the Kurdish regions

• The diversity of causes we represent in the Kurdish regions, enabling us to give voice to a far wider range of perspectives and experiences, including those of marginalised or minority groups or interests that might otherwise be ignored

What we do

Our Aims

- To promote awareness of the situation of the Kurds in Iran, Iraq, Syria, Turkey, the Caucasus and elsewhere
- To bring an end to the violation of the rights of the Kurds in these countries
- To promote the protection of human rights of Kurdish people everywhere

Our Beneficiaries

Our work benefits all people in the Kurdish regions, particularly the most marginalised groups – those subject to discrimination on ethnic, gender, race or religious grounds. Although many beneficiaries are of Kurdish origin, others are of Turkish, Arab and Persian and other origins.

Everyone in Europe has stronger protection of their human rights as a direct result of our litigation programme, which has established precedents on issues ranging from the abolition of the death penalty to detention without trial.

Our Methods

HUMAN RIGHTS ADVOCACY AND TRAINING

Our strategic use of international human rights mechanisms as a means to tackle human rights abuse forms a central part of our work. Of particular importance is our caseload of applications to the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR). We have brought cases on behalf of over 500 victims and survivors of extra-judicial killings, ‘disappearances’, torture, unfair trials, censorship and other human rights abuses. Our use of international and regional human rights mechanisms allows us not only to find redress for victims and their families, but also to create a culture of compliance among authorities and awareness among communities.

In 2005 we:

- Submitted 22 new cases representing 27 victims or survivors of human rights abuse to the ECtHR, with at least 21 more under consideration
Provided advice to well over 100 victims and survivors of human rights violations, including providing expert testimony in legal cases

- Received ECtHR judgments in 19 cases representing 33 individuals
- Received 2 ECtHR decisions of admissibility
- Liaised with the ECtHR over 12 cases that were communicated to the respondent governments

Part of our commitment to protecting human rights in the Kurdish regions involves developing an independent capacity for human rights enforcement in the region. To this end we work to motivate the rule of law and democracy by transferring skills and building capacity among human rights defenders and advocates in the regions through a coherent programme of regional training seminars.

In 2005 we:

- Conducted 5 regional trainings on remedies for rights violations for the most vulnerable groups in Turkey and Armenia
- Conducted 2 regional trainings on gender equality and women’s rights
- Trained 2 human rights defenders from the regions through internships at our London office
- Published 2 editions of our unique legal journal dedicated to human rights developments in the Kurdish regions

FACT-FINDING AND TRIAL OBSERVATION MISSIONS

Fact-finding and trial observation missions play an essential part in monitoring human rights abuse by providing independent investigations of allegations. The missions also help maintain vital grassroots links with victims and survivors of human rights abuse and their defenders, frequently also the subject of human rights abuse.

In 2005 we:

- Conducted 6 fact-finding missions focused on gender and development in Syria; women’s rights in Iraq; internal displacement, linguistic rights, freedom of expression and association in Turkey; and the social and environmental impact of the BTC oil pipeline in Georgia and Turkey
- Conducted 4 trial observerations. The focal point of 3 was the censorship of writers in Turkey. The fourth concerned effective criminal accountability for extra-judicial killings.

“The missions also help maintain vital grassroots links with victims and survivors of human rights abuse and their defenders, frequently also the subject of human rights abuse.”

RESEARCH AND PUBLICATIONS

Our publications – ranging from briefing papers to large-scale research – command high levels of public trust and confidence, and offer alternative ways of engaging with public policy debates and the process of democracy in the Kurdish regions. All our publications are available in hard copy and online.

In 2005 we:

• Published and disseminated 7 research reports and position papers, spanning gender, development and the Kurds in Syria; freedom of expression, association and minority rights in Turkey, particularly concerning Kurds; and conference papers from the 2004 ‘International Conference on Turkey, the Kurds and the EU’ held at the European Parliament in Brussels

• Published and disseminated 2 trial observation reports focused on freedom of expression and effective criminal accountability for extra-judicial killings in Turkey

• Published and disseminated 4 fact-finding mission reports focused on the cultural and environmental impact of large dams, extra-judicial killings, linguistic rights and internal displacement in Turkey

• Improved the marketing of our research and publications to enable wider outreach

PUBLIC AWARENESS, EDUCATION AND COMMUNICATION STRATEGIES

We firmly believe that if people knew the extent of the human rights abuses in the Kurdish regions, they could be stopped. Our independence and reputation for high quality analysis leads many policy and decision makers, journalists, academics and civil society organisations to consult us for updates about human rights and conflict in the Kurdish regions.

In 2005 we:

• Achieved press and broadcast media coverage.

• Received over 3 million hits on our website, an upward trend of 20 per cent in 2-years

• Published and disseminated 4000 copies of our newsletter, in addition to those downloaded from our website

• Hosted and participated in public conferences in the UK, Belgium, Paris and Jordan, including the largest conference yet on the controversial issue of Turkey’s EU accession at the European Parliament in Brussels

Charity Commission accepts KHKP’s argument that ‘procurement of the abolition of torture by all lawful means’ is a legitimate charitable objective for the first time. KHKP becomes a registered charity.

“The work of KHKP is invaluable. The information it provides is both regular and reliable. Without it the task of campaigning for human rights would be much more difficult.”

KHRP prompts Strasbourg mechanisms to set precedent that a series of incremental events – not only one event - could constitute a human rights violation.

In a case of critical importance for non-state media in general, KHRP case Ozgur Gundem v. Turkey for the first time places a positive obligation on states to protect free expression. Case establishes that Turkey had violated rights of first Kurdish-language newspaper.

The Kurds: A Background

The Kurds are the largest ethnic group without their own state. Perceived as posing a separatist threat and without any formal representation on the world stage, they have been subject to genocide, crimes against humanity and a host of other human rights abuses.

Many of the Kurds’ problems emerged from the aftermath of the First World War. Following the collapse of the Ottoman Empire, the regional powers signed a peace treaty – the Treaty of Sèvres – envisaging, among other provisions, the future establishment of an independent Kurdish state. However, following a war of independence by Mustafa ‘Kemal’ Ataturk and his movement, the Treaty of Lausanne was enacted instead. That treaty sidelined the Kurdish question altogether and finalised the division of the Kurdish regions between modern-day Turkey, Iraq, Iran and Syria.

Kurdish culture stems back to remote antiquity; descended from the migration of Indo-European tribes some 4,000 years ago to the Zagros mountains, now the heart of the Kurdish region. Although no formal censuses exist, there are estimated to be between 25 and 30 million Kurds originating from the mountainous region bordering modern Turkey, Iraq, Iran and Syria. Despite their cross-border spread and the large number of different languages and religions, Kurds undoubtedly share a strong overarching sense of identity.

The geopolitical importance of the region combined with significant oil and water resources there always appears to have hindered, not helped, the Kurds.

The issues faced by Kurds in each country vary in nature and intensity, but there are undeniably common threads. In almost all regions, Kurds face suspicion of harbouring separatist sympathies simply by virtue of their ethnic origin. Ethnic cleansing programmes, known as ‘Arabization’ or ‘Turkification’, have been implemented, accompanied by mass killings, displacement and prohibitions on Kurdish culture and language. Over the last twenty years, the Kurdish regions have been the scenes of genocide, crimes against humanity, extra-judicial killings, torture, mass displacement and censorship, among other abuses of international law.

Today, millions of Kurds live as internally displaced persons within state borders – physically prevented from returning to their former land and livelihoods following armed conflict. Millions more live as migrants, refugees and asylum seekers across the world.

Recent developments, particularly in Iraq and Turkey, have dramatically altered the prospects of the Kurds and the range of possibilities open to the international community to stimulate positive and effective change in the Kurdish regions.
In Turkey, Kurds generally are supportive of the goal of EU accession, bringing with it a promise of improved human and minority rights and tolerance. Recent reforms adopted by the government have liberalised longstanding bans on the use of the Kurdish language in broadcasting and education. Yet, the country still falls far short of EU standards. Registration of Kurdish personal or business names is prohibited – the use of Kurdish letters that do not appear in the Turkish alphabet can result in prosecution. Torture and ill-treatment persists and certain groups – particularly those perceived to harbour pro-Kurdish, Islamist or left sympathies – are particularly susceptible. Human rights defenders and NGOs frequently find themselves the targets of arbitrary intimidation and harassment.

The country is still far from recognising gender equality, particularly as it relates to private life. Security in the region has weakened since the resumption of armed conflict between the Turkish state and Kurdistan Workers’ Party (PKK) in June 2005.

The source of discrimination against Kurds in Iran stems not only from their ethnic minority status but also, just as importantly, from the fact that the majority of them are Sunnis in a country dominated by Shi’ites. Moreover, many Kurds fear that the conservative, populist Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, elected president in 2005, will roll back the little progress that occurred under his predecessor, Mohammad Khatami.

In Syria, the state of emergency in place since 1963 has augmented the Ba’athist regime’s tools for oppression and impunity. Kurds are excluded from the government’s general policy of allowing ethnic minorities to perform traditional activities; they face restrictions of fundamental freedoms concerning association, residence, travel and movement.

Moreover, up to 360,000 Kurds are stateless following a 1962 census that stripped them of their nationality. This, perhaps more than anything else, denies them of their civil, political, social, economic and cultural rights.

The lack of civil and political freedoms in Azerbaijan and Armenia mean many Kurds are afraid to speak about their situation. The states view civil society organisations, opposition political supporters or human rights defenders with suspicion, leading to arbitrary arrests, detentions, torture or ill-treatment and even killings. Elections are neither free nor fair, and corruption is rife.

Many Kurds in Iraq welcomed the US-led coalition that toppled the Ba’athist regime in 2003, not only because it removed a much-abhorred tyrant, but also because it allowed the Kurds to strengthen their moves towards development of Kurdish Regional Federation state. It remains to be seen whether or not Iraq will progress towards an inclusive, pluralist society based on the accommodation of difference, but, unlike in neighbouring countries, the Kurds of Iraq do at least have political influence with which to promote their own rights. However, their rising influence has led to attendant problems for Kurds in other regions, with authorities in Turkey, Iran and Syria fearing the impact that increased international attention for Kurds could have on the Kurdish situation within their own borders.

The rule of law is essential in practically ensuring that human rights standards are adhered to. Only a genuinely impartial judiciary can effectively protect the rights of individuals.

We are representing several individuals who allege their rights to a fair trial and to liberty have been violated by Turkish authorities. One concern is a man who was stigmatised and unable to return to his former employment after charges were brought against him for assisting an illegal armed group. He spent 19 months in detention even though all charges were dropped. Another concern is a musician, composer and human rights activist, Sanar Yurdatapan, who was arrested in Turkey in 1997 under suspicion of liaising with supporters of an armed group. This is one of dozens of cases against the activist.

INDEPENDENCE OF THE COURT

Terrorism and security concerns are often cited to justify undermining the rule of law and an erosion of the separation of powers. Turkey’s State Security Courts were a case in point. They were heir to the martial law courts and allowed military influence over the systems of justice by mandating the presence of a military judge. Through our strategic litigation, we have sought to challenge and undo the unjust legacy of these institutions. Our cases through the year included:

- Osman Özüpek, Duran Özdemir and Hüseyin Avni Yazıcıoğlu. In March the ECtHR upheld our case that the process had breached their rights to a fair trial.

- Hatip Çaplık. The ECtHR upheld our case that his right to a fair trial had been violated and that the length of proceedings was unreasonable.

- Fikret Karaoglan Our case to the ECtHR, complaining that his right to a fair trial in Turkey had been violated, was communicated to the government in 2005.
POLITICAL REPRESSION

Human rights violations are most often committed against those perceived to pose a challenge to authority, such as human rights defenders and political dissidents. Furthermore, political repression often leads to violent conflict; and in turn widespread human rights abuses. Our programme promotes adherence to international democratic standards and regards cultural diversity and freedom as positive and necessary elements of a true democracy.

During the year we expanded our work in the Caucasus and worked extensively on adherence to democratic standards in cases including:

• Stephan Demirchyan is chairman of the People’s Party of Armenia and an opposition candidate for the presidential elections in 2003, during which massive fraud occurred accompanied by the harassment and ill-treatment of supporters of certain parties. In 2004 special forces conducted an illegal search and seizure of materials at the party offices, based in the Karen Serob Demirchyan Museum, named after the applicant’s father who was killed during an attack on the National Assembly of Armenia in 1999. Twelve people were taken to the police department and several were ill-treated. We submitted a case to the ECtHR complaining of multiple violations of human rights.

• Artak Zeynalyan is a senior member of the Armenian opposition party Hanrapetutyun (RPP). He was detained following a widespread political process in April 2004 at which thousands of people rallied demanding the resignation of the President of Armenia. Fifteen police officers forcibly entered and searched the RPP offices without providing evidence of authorisation. That night Zaynalyan was forced into a car and taken to a temporary detention facility where he was kept for 36 hours without access to legal representation. He returned to his office to discover several of his belongings destroyed or missing. We submitted a complaint to the ECtHR complaining of multiple violations of his human rights.

• Sasha Sayadyan is a member of the Armenian opposition party Hanrapetutyun (RPP). Following his refusal to sign a statement that he would not attend a demonstration, he was placed on trial at which he was denied legal representation and at which he was sentenced to ten days administrative arrest. He was detained in a small cell with one other person, both sleeping on a wooden desk, and denied access to food and washing facilities. We submitted a new complaint to the ECtHR.
complaining of multiple violations of his human rights

- Sargsi Amiryan complains that he was intimidated by police, who questioned him about his participation in demonstrations. He was brought before a court where he confirmed his name. The judge replied, “Fifteen days of administrative detention. Get out.” In detention he was denied access to lawyers and relatives, and he was fined upon release. We submitted a new case to the ECtHR complaining of multiple violations of his human rights.
The year 2005 was troubling for anti-torture campaigners. Governments professing a commitment to combating terrorism not only undermined the ban on torture and other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment – they argued such practices were justifiable and necessary.

We have fought hard not to lose precious ground won on the eradication of torture and ill-treatment, particularly in Turkey. Our strategic litigation and advocacy has in the past ensured the reduction of detention periods and the redefinition of rape as a form of torture under the European Convention on Human Rights. Together with an International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia ruling, these cases revolutionised how rape by or with the acquiescence of a state actor is seen in international law.

As our past experience has taught us, there are many practical measures capable of dramatically reducing incidents of torture and ill-treatment. Broadly speaking, independent supervision of law enforcement and security authorities coupled with effective criminal accountability are thought to be the most effective means of prevention.

Through regular meetings with survivors of torture or ill-treatment and their defenders, we continuously monitor the behaviour of law enforcement and security authorities. In most of the Kurdish regions, reports of torture or ill-treatment persist with a regularity that is deeply troubling. Turkish State official statistics estimate that in the first quarter of 2005, 1,239 torture and ill-treatment cases were filed against law enforcement officials. The Human Rights Association’s October 2005 ‘Report on Prevention of Torture and Impunity of Perpetrators’ suggests that perpetrators of torture are still protected at almost all levels of investigation and judicial prosecution. According to İHD, 69 per cent of trials led to acquittals and 15 per cent led to postponement, bringing no punishment to suspected perpetrators.

We also continuously strive to obtain effective criminal accountability through domestic or international courts. We monitor domestic cases against police and other officials accused of violating the prohibition of torture or ill-treatment, as well as submitting cases to international human rights courts to incentivise states to bring torturers to justice. For example, when all eleven of the police officials accused of ill-treating Ferhat Kaya – a local politician and human rights defender who has worked to mitigate the impact of BP’s Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan pipeline in north-east Turkey – during detention were acquitted, we submitted a new case to the ECtHR complaining that his human rights had been violated. Such cases have had strong results – compelling the Turkish government to pay 592,000 EUR in pecuniary and non-pecuniary damages in cases concerning detention, torture, ill-treatment or the right to a fair trial this year alone.

Over half of our new cases to the ECtHR in 2005 concerned detention, torture or ill-treatment in the Caucasus. We lodged eleven new cases concerning the treatment of protesters, or... would-be protestors in Armenia, in demonstrations calling for the resignation of the president in April 2004. One applicant alleges he and his wife were repeatedly requested to appear at the city police department, where he was denied access to legal representation and was requested to sign a false confession. Other applicants allege they were put in detention or subjected to torture or ill-treatment. A further seven new cases were communicated to the Armenian government during the year, relating to the harassment and intimidation of opposition political candidates and protestors during the 2003 presidential elections. The applicants variously complain of having been arrested and detained arbitrarily; forced to share a single bed between three people in detention; and fined. All of the cases were brought with the assistance of the Forum Law Centre.

Many more of our cases relate to the intimidation or harassment of human rights defenders or members of opposition political parties, particularly those that have taken up the Kurdish issue. In 2005 these cases included:

- Serdar Tanış and Ebubekir Deniz, two senior figures in the People’s Democratic Party (DEHAP), disappeared in 2001 after receiving telephone calls requesting their attendance at the Silopi police station. In August, the ECtHR upheld our complaints that Turkey had failed to provide adequate investigations and a credible explanation for the disappearances, therefore violating the right to life and the right to liberty and security. The Court also found that, because the Turkish state had shown a lack of care in investigating the circumstances of the disappearance, it had increased the suffering of the victims’ relatives, violating the prohibition of torture and ill-treatment (Article 3).

- Ahmet Dizman, a Kurd, was taken to an isolated place and beaten by police officers, during which his jaw was broken. This followed his attendance at the funeral of two members of the People’s Democracy Party (HADEP), a pro-Kurdish political party whose members have experienced harassment and intimidation. Following a 7-year legal challenge, the ECtHR upheld our complaints and compelled the Turkish government to pay compensation.

- Sinan Tanrıku, Servet Ayhan and Firat Anlı are three Turkish nationals, two of whom are also prominent human rights defenders with the Diyarbakir Bar Association. They were held in police custody for twelve days before judicial intervention. Following our 9-year legal battle, the ECtHR upheld our complaints in October that their rights to liberty and security had been violated and that they were entitled to compensation.

Many of the cases brought before the ECtHR combine torture or ill-treatment with other human rights violations. The ECtHR has recognised in many of our right to life cases that the mental anguish experienced by individuals following the ‘disappearance’ of a relative was a violation of the prohibition of torture or ill-treatment. Similarly, it has held that the destruction of family homes and possessions before an individual’s eyes is a form of mental anguish sufficient to breach the ECHR. In the landmark Abdullah Öcalan v. Turkey judgment, the Grand Chamber in 2005 confirmed the ECtHR’s strongest statements yet in condemning recourse to the death penalty, describing it as an inhuman or degrading form of punishment.

Our litigation concerning the right to be free of torture or ill-treatment in 2005 included:

- Aydin Kişmir was arrested and detained in Diyarbakir police headquarters in 1997 and died in police custody after six days. The ECtHR upheld our complaints that head and other bodily injuries had led to his death, and condemned Turkey for violating his right to life and the prohibition of torture or ill-treatment. The state was compelled to pay compensation to his relatives.

- Süheyla Aydın, a Kurd, complained that she and her husband had been taken into police custody where she had been subjected to inhuman and degrading treatment and her husband to torture in 1994. Her husband was subsequently found dead in a shallow grave outside Diyarbakir with his hands tied behind his back and a single bullet through the head. In May the ECtHR upheld our complaints that their rights to life and to be free of torture or ill-treatment had been violated, among other breaches of the ECHR.

- Kadri Ateş died in June 1995 after being arrested by plain clothes policemen and being allegedly subjected to torture while in custody. The authorities told Kadri’s family that he was not in custody and that he had died as a result of a clash between security forces and the PKK. The ECtHR’s decision in May 2005 confirmed that Kadri had indeed been unlawfully detained and that Turkey had failed to account for his death.

ISLAMIC REPUBLIC OF IRAN

The Islamic Republic of Iran’s constitution guarantees equal rights to ethnic and recognised religious minorities, but this does not apply to the overwhelming majority of the Kurdish population.

The human rights situation has deteriorated rapidly over the year, with increases of civilian deaths, harassment of journalists and human rights defenders, newspaper closures, arrests of children and torture or ill-treatment. There is de facto martial law in many areas. The UN Special Rapporteur on Housing confirmed in his recent report that the Kurdish regions suffer a disproportionate lack of basic infrastructure services such as water and electricity.

In 2005, we launched a 1-year research project on the discrimination faced by the region’s Kurds, holding interviews and consultations with numerous interested individuals and groups. We also raised awareness of the issue at public meetings, including a parliamentary meeting, and in interviews with domestic and international media.
IRAQ

Saddam Hussein’s regime did not provide any effective measures to protect the rights of ethnic or religious minorities in Iraq, such as Christians, Yazedis, Mandi Sabans, Turkmen, Syriacs, Armenians and Chaldean-Assyrians. His fall from power has presented something of an opportunity for these groups to tackle the discrimination they have faced.

The Constitution of Iraq, approved in the referendum of October 2005, contains provisions aiming to protect minority rights. Article 14 states that: “Iraqis are equal before the law without discrimination based on gender, race, ethnicity, origin, colour, religion, creed, belief or opinion, or economic and social status.” Elsewhere, the constitution “guarantees the full religious rights” of all citizens and permits political, language and cultural freedoms.

However, minority groups and international observers still have a number of concerns. For instance, Article 121, which guarantees “administrative, political, cultural and educational rights”, will only be effective if further laws are enacted, but these laws have yet to be enacted. Minorities fear that their representation at parliament, in which they gain one seat per 100,000 members of the population, does not provide enough influence to ensure that laws will sufficiently uphold the constitution’s statements on anti-discrimination.

We have worked throughout the year to raise awareness of these issues and to influence decision and policy-makers in Iraq, as they try to rebuild a devastated country. We have also worked to combat discrimination against women and girls (see ‘Gender Equality, page 40).

ARAB REPUBLIC OF SYRIA

In Syria, discriminatory legislation prevents thousands of Kurds from marrying, working, obtaining travel documents or even speaking their language freely. A state of emergency has been in place for 41 years and up to 360,000 Kurds are stateless, as a result of a 1962 census that stripped citizenship from them overnight. A summer 2005 promise to some has not yet materialised. There is concern about the practice of torture and ill-treatment in prisons and related state security divisions, and over the impunity of perpetrators.

In 2005, Executive Director Kerim Yildiz published a unique insight into the plight of the Syrian Kurds. “The Kurds in Syria: The Forgotten People”, published in the UK by Pluto Press and in the US by the University of Michigan, examines the contemporary situation of the Syrian Kurds in the context of the region’s history, and the present situation whereby Syria is blacklisted as a terrorist state by the USA.

This year’s second publication concerning discrimination in Syria was published in July, and focused on the effects of the government’s development policies. The report details the hardships felt by women, particularly those that are Kurds, in the areas of citizenship, poverty and labour. Concluding a 2-year research project, we also sent a fact-finding mission to the Kurdish regions of north-east Syria in February.

TURKEY

Turkey’s accession to the European Union frequently topped the political agenda in 2005, particularly in the lead up to the October decision to begin official membership talks. The Kurdish issue is central to a stable, democratic and peaceful Turkey – and by extension, Europe.

There was optimism in July when Prime Minister Erdogan acknowledged past mistakes and the existence of a Kurdish question – in itself a transformation of official policy. However this optimism was offset by widespread concerns of a deteriorating human rights climate and the renewal of armed conflict against the Turkish state.

Our position as the only non-partisan, multidisciplinary organisation working consistently on the human rights situation in the Kurdish regions has pushed us to the very forefront of the debate. In 2005, Executive Director Kerim Yildiz published the most up-to-date critical analysis of the problems faced by the Kurds in Turkey and the prospects for Turkey joining the EU. “The Kurds in Turkey: EU Accession and Human Rights” was published in the UK by Pluto Press and in the US by the University of Michigan, received critical acclaim, and was reviewed in leading periodicals including the New York Review of Books.

Alongside our very public role in organising events, producing reports and liaising with press and broadcast media, we have also held numerous briefings with governments, non-governmental organisations, intergovernmental organisations and others with an interest in the present and future stability of Turkey and the EU.

Turkey And the European Convention on Human Rights

No organisation has had a greater impact at the European Court of Human Rights or in Turkey’s socio-political configuration than KHRP. We have the strongest track record of successfully proving gross human rights violations to have occurred of any organisation in Europe.

This was implicitly acknowledged by the Council of Europe’s Committee of Ministers in June when over three quarters of the 77 cases it cited as measures of Turkey’s compliance with the European Convention on Human Rights were those brought by the KHRP. The cases concerned established human rights violations committed by Turkey’s security forces, including violations of the right to life, prohibition of torture or ill-treatment, the destruction of property and lack of effective domestic remedies. In the past six years alone there have been 764 such judgments finding Turkey in breach of at least one of its human rights obligations, the majority of them against Kurdish people.

Surprisingly, however, the ECtHR has never to date found it necessary to consider whether these were symptomatic of an underlying discrimination against Kurds in Turkey. Partly dissenting opinions in six of our cases that reached judgment in 2005 suggest the ECtHR may be reconsidering this approach. This is the very first time the Court has given such attention to complaints of discrimination from Kurds in Turkey.

One of the cases concerned a Kurdish boy who was killed in an incident that appeared to constitute reprisal against the youth for expressing his Kurdish identity (Mesut Dundar v. Turkey). The ECtHR condemned Turkey for its failure to investigate the circumstances of the death. Whilst the majority considered it unnecessary to consider the complaint of discrimination separately, Judge Mularoni said she felt uncomfortable not considering the issue of discrimination given the number of applications lodged by Turkish citizens of Kurdish origin, and particularly following an earlier judgment finding a violation of the right to freedom from discrimination in a case brought by Roma people against Bulgaria.

A ECtHR ruling that abuses against Kurds are discriminatory and therefore systematic could carry serious implications for the process of Turkey’s accession to the EU, and allow for wider scope for group action claims. One of our key aims in 2006 will be to pursue this possibility. We will also continue to pursue test cases on a range of other issues, including torture, ill-treatment and internal displacement.
Turkey and the Copenhagen Criteria

On balance, we are supportive of Turkey’s eventual accession to the EU. The prediction that full accession will not take place until at least 2014 may allow enough time for prompting and fully implementing further human rights reform and facilitating dialogue on important issues including the Kurdish question. However, there are numerous indications that the human rights environment in Turkey deteriorated during 2005, and we remain convinced of the need for the Copenhagen Criteria – the EU standards on human rights, minority rights and democracy – to be robustly enforced.

With the Kurds neither occupying a seat in Europe nor having access to mainstream politics in Turkey, there is a particular duty on all parties to the accession process to ensure that Turkey’s Kurdish population is adequately represented. We have worked with people at all levels of the political spectrum – from grassroots groups to high-level policy and decision-makers – to ensure, as much as possible, that the perspectives of minority groups including Kurds are represented in the discussions.

As a founding member of the EU-Turkey Civic Commission (EUTCC), a non-profit association aimed at monitoring the accession process and making recommendations, we supported their second conference at the European Parliament, Edward McMillan-Scott, Kurdish writer Mehmet Uzun, former parliamentarians in Turkey Hatip Dicle and Selim Sadak, president of the delegation to the EU-Turkey Joint Parliamentary Committee Joost Lagendijk MEP, mayor of Diyarbakir Osman Baydemir, member of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe Lord Russell Johnston and representatives of human rights groups including the Human Rights Association, TOHAV, FIDH, International PEN and Mazlum-Der. We facilitated several further EUTCC public and private events throughout Europe during the year.

Turkey and the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe

Concerned with Turkey’s non-compliance with human rights standards, we urged the OSCE’s High Commissioner for Minorities to examine the case for establishing a bilateral Turkish-Kurdish forum as part of our submission to the OSCE in September.

Our annual submissions to the OSCE provide the only representation afforded to Kurds as part of its regular Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights Human Dimensions Implementation meetings.

“We will also continue to pursue test cases on a range of other issues, including torture, ill-treatment and internal displacement.”
The social and environmental impacts of BP’s Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan pipeline through Azerbaijan, Georgia and Turkey are set to worsen as soon as it begins pumping oil. Accordingly throughout the year we intensified our efforts to defend local people’s human rights and to hold BP and the project’s financial backers to account.

Construction of the project has been proceeding for around two-and-a-half years, and has had a severe impact for the people and environment of Azerbaijan, Georgia and Turkey. Persuaded by the promises that it would bring development a majority of people living on the route initially supported the pipeline before construction began, but now most oppose it, having seen those promises broken.

People have lost their land, and with it their livelihood, often with minimal or no compensation. In Georgia, compensation is still disputed with 30 per cent of land plots. In Azerbaijan, people had to sign compensation documents written in the Latin script, whereas they can only read in Cyrillic. Similarly, in Turkey, many of the expropriation documents were actually in English.

Far from bringing promised long-term, well-paid employment, international labour standards have been violated in all three countries. Workers from the three countries themselves have been paid a fraction of what foreigners have earned for the same jobs, have been kept in inadequate living conditions, and have been subject to short-term contracts and arbitrary dismissal.

The project has bulldozed through protected areas, and has violated its environmental permits. In the vital Borjomi-Kharagauli National Park in Georgia, through which the pipeline passes, experts still feel that BP has not given any realistic assessment of the risk to the area or to the mineral water produced there.

Yet this is only the start. Its most severe impacts will begin to be felt when the oil begins to flow. Human rights violations are expected as the host states move to defend the pipeline, and critics of the project have already been subject to intimidation and arrest. A central question will be whether the revenues are distributed accountably and fairly, or whether they will increase corruption and strengthen undemocratic institutions.

The major flaws in construction standards create a high likelihood – some say an inevitability – of oil spills.

In 2005, we, together with our partner organisations in the Baku-Ceyhan Campaign - Friends of the Earth England, Wales and Northern Ireland, the Corner House and Platform – joined forces with other civil society organisations including CEE Bankwatch Network (Europe), Urgewald (Germany), Green Alternatives (Georgia), Center for Civic Initiatives (Azerbaijan) and the Committee for the Protection of Oil Workers’ Rights (Azerbaijan) to:

- Enhance systems for monitoring the impacts of the pipeline, both in the three countries and through international fact-finding missions – and publicise these results. This included sending two international fact-finding missions to Georgia and Turkey to investigate the pipeline’s impact on the ground.

- Help individuals and communities whose rights have been violated to seek redress through local, national and international courts and through international recourse mechanisms, and to press for properly, independent and accessible mechanisms for redress. This included our representation of over 38 Kurdish farmers who claim to have been expropriated by the pipeline in the north-east Ardahan and Posof districts of Turkey in cases before the ECtHR
(See also Ferhat Kaya case, page 27)

- Examine the broader economic, social and environmental impacts of the pipeline in the three countries. This included collaborating with civil society organisations on the ground, including participation in a 2-day strategy meeting in Georgia in September. Together with the Corner House and a local individual affected by the project, we are also taking a legal challenge to the European Court of Justice concerning the failure of the European Commission to ensure the project complies with Turkey’s pro-EU obligations

- Hold to account the companies and financial institutions that backed the pipeline and pushing for their urgent reform. This included providing expert evidence to a UK House of Commons Trade and Industry Select Committee investigation into the Export Credit Guarantees Department (ECGD), which ultimately criticised the ECGD’s lack of transparency over the project. We also urged UK parliamentarians to sign onto Early Day Motions in relation to the project, and raised awareness of the project through regular press releases, supporters’ updates and press and broadcast media interviews

SOUTHEAST ANATOLIAN PROJECT (GAP DAMS)

Fundamental flaws in plans for the proposed Ilisu dam in Turkey provoked international attention from 2000 to 2002. Following an exemplary international campaign, the consortium of companies planning to build the dams collapsed, safeguarding the ancient sites of archaeological significance in the area as well as the welfare of up to 78,000 people, mostly Kurds, who stood to be displaced by the project.

Almost three years on, our fact-finding mission conducted jointly with the National University of Ireland, Galway gathered evidence of a new consortium of companies coming together to build the discredited dam and others. Formal applications for public funding support have been submitted to the export credit agencies (ECAs) of Austria, Switzerland and Germany. On this and other subsequent visits, communities vigorously disputed the claim that 100 per cent of locals have been consulted, as suggested by the company leading the consortium VA Tech Hydro. The overwhelming response on the ground is one of absolute opposition to the dams.

In 2005 we joined forces with local, regional, national and international civil society organisations to:

- Enhance systems for monitoring the dam, through regular liaison with communities on the ground and through international fact-finding missions, and publicising the results. (See our joint publication with the National Univer-
Examine the broader economic, social and environmental impacts of the pipeline in the three countries. In conjunction with local groups and Corner House (UK), Berne Declaration (Switzerland), World Economy Ecology and Development (WEED), ECA-Watch (Austria), Fern (Belgium) and Goc-Der (Turkey), this included holding a seminar in October to examine the international experience with large dams and its relevance to Turkey’s dam building programme in general, and the Southeast Anatolia Project (GAP) in particular.

Hold to account the companies and financial institutions that are backing the dams and pushing for their urgent reform. This included raising awareness of the project through our newsletter, website, press releases and press and broadcast media.

We are fighting to put the global advancement of human rights on a legal footing, by arguing that signatories to the European Convention on Human Rights are compelled to comply with its obligations even when intervening in the territory of third states, even when they are under different jurisdictions.

Our case Mansur Pad and Others v. Turkey concerns one Iraqi and seven Iranian citizens, all Kurds, who were abused and killed when Turkish troops crossed the border into Iran in 1999. The Turkish government has admitted responsibility for the killings. We have made further representations in the case, which was newly communicated to the government in March. The case is now pending judgment.

Disappointingly, the Grand Chamber in 2005 declined our appeal to reduce the evidentiary burden placed on applicants in such cases, given the unequal access to resources between the individual and the state in cases of this kind. That case, Issa v. Turkey, concerns the alleged killing and mutilation of seven Kurdish shepherds by Turkish troops during cross-border incursions in 1995. The case has been of key importance in determining the human rights obligations of, for example, British troops serving in Iraq.

Freedom of expression is closely related to other civil and political rights – the rights to hold particular beliefs, thoughts or issues of conscience; to adhere to a particular religion; or to associate or assemble with others sharing similar beliefs. These rights all combine to fulfil the vital role of allowing individuals to realise their full human potential.

Turkey is committed under international law to secure the right to freedom of expression and has instituted numerous reforms in this area in relation to the EU accession process. Yet despite the abundance of new legislation, there remain serious concerns about censorship. In 2005 this widespread apprehension proved to be well-founded. In fact prosecutions against publishers, human rights defenders, writers, artists, and journalists increased in 2005.

LEFT Vali Ali Hosein, Jader Ebrahim-Manesh, Vahap Pad (Bottom row L-R) Changiz Afrasi, Abdul Khalet Keshawez, Ghazi Afrasi and Kamfar Pad were all Kurds living in Iran when Turkish security forces crossed the border, killing them and grossly mutilating their corpses. Their relatives’ cases to the ECtHR could have a dramatic impact on interpretation of the ECHR’s scope

If Turkey is to adequately protect the right to freedom of expression, additional reforms are needed to bring legislation in line with international standards. For example, Article 301 of the Turkish Penal Code has been used frequently to prosecute human rights defenders, journalists and other members of civil society peacefully expressing their dissenting opinion.

Freedom of expression, association, thought, conscience, belief and religion continue to be priority areas for our work in Turkey. Our fact-finding mission to Istanbul, Diyarbakir, Tunceli and Batman in south-east Turkey in April found that in spite of numerous EU-related reforms, there remain grave concerns about the 'chilling effect' of Turkey's state practices surrounding the media and human rights defenders. The mission's findings were published in September (see 'Dissenting Voices: Freedom of Expression and Association in Turkey', Resources page 52).

We pursued these findings with a further mission in July, conducted jointly with BHRC and the EU-Turkey Civic Commission (EUTCC) focused on linguistic rights enjoyed by minorities in the region and on the status of the Kurdish language. The mission found further evidence that EU-reforms were not being implemented on the ground, and concluded that lifting restrictions on education and broadcasting in the Kurdish language would be essential to ensuring a multicultural, pluralist and ultimately peaceful country. The mission's findings were published in September (See 'Recognition of Linguistic Rights? The Impact of Pro-EU Reforms in Turkey', Resources page 52).

Our most detailed report yet on the issue, 'Freedom of Expression and of Association in Turkey' was published in November. The report concludes that much remains to be done before Turkey could meet European standards on civil and political rights.

As well as examining the overall practice of violations of freedom of expression and of association, our casework on individual cases included:

- Ünsal Öztürk, the owner of an independent publishing firm in Turkey who was convicted by several State Security Courts for publishing propaganda against the 'indivisible unity' of the state and sentenced to 17-months imprisonment and a fine. In October 2005, the ECtHR upheld our case that his rights to freedom of expression and to due process had been violated

- Noyan Tapan Ltd is an independent news agency and television company that experienced harassment and intimidation from authorities. We have continued working on our case alleging violations of freedom of expression, which in 2004 set a precedent by being the very first ECtHR case against Armenia to be declared admissible

- Ragip Zarakolu and Fikret Baskaya are respectively a publisher and a leading intellectual who published separate articles expressing their beliefs on issues including self-determination and secularism. Both men have been the subject of numerous prosecutions for their beliefs. We observed the trials of both men in March to monitor adherence to fair trial standards, and published a report, ‘Freedom of Expression at Risk: Writers on Trial in Turkey’ in March 2005

- Orhan Pamuk is an internationally renowned novelist who was put on trial in Turkey for allegedly ‘insulting Turkey’s national character’. He was quoted in a Swiss newspaper as saying that only he had dared to say that Turkey killed 30,000 Kurds and a million Armenians. We observed the first hearing in his trial in December to monitor compliance with international human rights law. The charges were subsequently dropped.

Gender Equality

Discrimination and violence against women is relentless and systematic throughout the world. It is all the more damaging when compounded with ethnic discrimination and violent conflict. Women in the Kurdish regions face an uphill struggle as they tackle discrimination on several fronts, often without access to political or legal remedies.

As well as recognising women as survivors of human rights abuses, we acknowledge and actively support the role that women often play in peace work and community reconstruction through research, training and public awareness activities.

In 2005 we concluded a 2-year research project into the impact of Syria’s development policies on its most disadvantaged groups, particularly women and minorities. This was supplemented, in February, by a fact-finding mission to the region. The report ‘Development in Syria – A Gender and Minority Perspective’ highlighted the discrimination felt by women and by Kurds in the areas of citizenship, poverty and labour.

Another key focus of the year has been in ensuring that women and men receive equal recognition in the new Islamic Federal Republic of Iraq. We participated in an international conference on the status of women in Iraqi Kurdistan, delivering a presentation on the use of international legal instruments to bring about change. The conference, which was supported by the Kurdistan Regional Government, aimed to highlight the role of women in democratisation, to develop ideas for new initiatives and to generate dialogue between Kurdish and non-Kurdish men and women.

Although our planned training in Suleimaniyah, Iraqi Kurdistan, on the use of international human rights mechanisms to promote gender equality was rendered impossible by an airport closure, we met with several civil society organisation representatives in neighbouring Jordan to share information. We also attended a key meeting, bringing together members of the Iraqi National Assembly, Constitutional Committee and civil society leaders, on the role of women in drafting the Iraq constitution. This was complemented by our advocacy to UN and national governments on the inclusion of women in the constitution-drafting process.

Throughout the year we have worked to raise public awareness about the discrimination faced by women in the Kurdish regions, including delivering public talks and being featured several times in national and international media.

“Today, an estimated 3 million people remain internally displaced following armed conflict in Turkey between 1984 and 1999. The majority of them have been unable to return to their homes or villages since being evacuated during state security operations in the early 1990s.”

Virtually all major armed conflicts take place within and not between states. In many cases, this is a disincentive for the international community or other states to ensure adequate restitution for civilians caught in the conflict.

Today, an estimated 3 million people remain internally displaced following armed conflict in Turkey between 1984 and 1999. The majority of them have been unable to return to their homes or villages since being evacuated during state security operations in the early 1990s. Although their right to return to their homes is recognised in domestic and international law, very few have been able to do so. The government has failed to provide infrastructure such as electricity, telephone lines and schools to returning communities. There is an 80 per cent rate of unemployment among internally displaced people (IDPs) in major south-east Kurdish cities. In some areas, the government’s paramilitary village guards intimidate, attack and sometimes even kill returnees. The resumption of armed conflict in the Kurdish regions in 2005 has made the need to secure redress for these marginalised groups even more pressing.

In July 2004, Turkey introduced a law purporting to grant compensation to people who had suffered a loss of property in this way. However, our fact-finding mission, conducted jointly with the Bar Human Rights Committee of England and Wales (BHRC) and the EU-Turkey Civic Commission, found that this appeals process is seriously flawed, leaving the overwhelming majority of IDPs without any effective domestic remedy. (See ‘The Status of Internally Displaced Kurds in Turkey and Compensation Rights’, September 2005).

Our work equips internally displaced people and those defending them with the tools necessary to approach international human rights mechanisms for resolution of their cases. Over fifty lawyers and human rights defenders attended our training on this issue in June in Diyarbakir, conducted jointly with Human Rights Watch, the Diyarbakir Bar Association and the BHRC, on the rights of IDPs to compensation. The training was accompanied by a strategy meeting among civil society organisations.

The recent European Court of Human Rights judgment in Xenides-Arestis v. Turkey concerning Cyprus suggests the restoration of properties and compensation for 'loss of use' could be an effective remedy. We are examining how this judgment could prove significant in cases affecting Kurdish IDPs. Our ECtHR case-work in relation to internal displacement and expropriation of property in 2005 included:

- Abdullah Menteşe, Zühra Bozkuş, Hatun Demirhan, Mustafa Demirhan, Ayşe Harman and Süleyman Moçu are villagers and Turkish nationals whose family homes were forcibly destroyed and evacuated in May 1996. Four relatives were killed. We took their complaints to the ECtHR which ruled, in January 2005, that their rights to an effective remedy had been breached and that they should be compensated.

- Thirty people, mostly Kurdish farmers, living in the Ardahan and Posof districts of north-east Turkey complain that they were inadequately consulted and compensated for the loss of use of their land when the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan oil pipeline was constructed. Disappointingly, the ECtHR declared the first of these cases inadmissible in 2005.

In 2005 we brought a new case on behalf of Elkhan Chiragov, Adishirin Chiragov, Qaraca Gabrayilov, Ramiz Gebrayilov, Akif Hasanof and Fekhreddin Pashayev, six Azeri Kurds who were forced to leave their homes in the town of Lachin in Nagorna Karbakh, when it was captured by Armenian forces in May 1992.

We also worked to support organisations working domestically to improve the situation of IDPs, including raising awareness of the intimidation and harassment experienced by the NGO Göç-Der, our partner organisation.

Our work is aimed at promoting and protecting human rights abuse within the Kurdish regions of Turkey, Iraq, Iran, Syria and elsewhere. However, a very high proportion of the world’s refugees and asylum seekers derive from these countries due to the widespread human rights abuses there. As a consequence, we are also frequently requested to assist asylum seekers and refugees, and consulted about refugee and migration policy in general.

Throughout the year on an ad hoc basis, we provided independent expert reports which evaluated the individual’s case for asylum and, where applicable, the government’s reasons for refusal. Our unique position also enables us to participate in consultations with governments about immigration issues pertaining to the Kurdish regions and in general.
DEATHS IN CUSTODY

Many prisoners and detainees and have died in custody as a result of torture and ill-treatment by police and security forces in the Kurdish regions. Without effective controls and legal protection, individuals are particularly vulnerable. Collecting evidence and seeking redress for relatives is an immense and sometimes fruitless struggle. We have long fought to bring justice to victims and their families and worked to strengthen systems and controls which can prevent further deaths.

We are currently working on several cases concerning the suspicious deaths of Kurdish conscripts in the Turkish army. For example, Cihan Tunç, a Kurdish conscript, was found dead in February 2004 while completing his military service. Cihan’s parents Mustafa and Fecire Tunç vigorously reject the military court’s official finding that their son had committed suicide, believing instead that he was killed due to his ethnic origin.

Our cases relating to deaths in custody in 2005 included:

• An incident that became known as the Gucluconak massacre – The British peer Lord Avebury once described the case as, “One of a great many cases where the truth may never be fully uncovered,” and the incident raised questions in the UK parliament. In 1996, our fact-finding mission gathered evidence that state security forces were responsible for the deaths of ten men who had been in Turkish custody when the minibus they were travelling in came under fire. In November 2005, the ECtHR upheld our complaints that Turkey had failed to secure their rights to life, to liberty and security and to an effective remedy for the bereaved relatives, who were each awarded damages for emotional distress, costs and expenses.

• Necati Aydin’s body was found abandoned in a shallow grave outside Diyarbakir in 1994. He had last been seen in police custody where he had been subjected to inhuman and degrading treatment and torture. The ECtHR ruled that Turkey had failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the deceased was not in custody at the time of his death and was responsible for his death. Turkey was also found to have violated the ECHR by failing to disclose crucial documents, summon crucial witnesses, and by failing to provide an effective remedy to the applicant.

• Cemal Ucar was detained, tortured and forced to sign confessions ‘admitting’ his involvement in Hizbullah in 1999. He remained in custody for a further eleven days before being found dead in Diyarbakir E-type prison. The ECtHR declared all his father’s complaints admissible.
DEATH PENALTY

In one of the most significant cases ever to come before Strasbourg, the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) made its strongest statements yet in condemning recourse to the death penalty. Its highest panel of judges confirmed in May that the imposition of capital punishment on Kurdish rebel leader Abdullah Öcalan violated his human rights in several respects.

The Grand Chamber took the exceptional step of declaring its view that, in principle, the applicant should if he requested be provided a retrial without delay to compensate deficiencies in his earlier trial. He has remained in solitary confinement as the sole prisoner on Imrali Island since 1999.

Öcalan was abducted from Kenya in 1999 and sentenced to death in Turkish courts. It was clear from the outset that if condemned by the ECtHR, Turkey would be forced to make a humiliating climb-down in the treatment of its longstanding opponent in order to accede to the EU. It is widely believed that this concern influenced Turkey to reduce his sentence in 2002 to life imprisonment with no chance of parole or amnesty. In any event, the ECtHR held that the original imposition of the death penalty had violated the prohibition of inhuman and degrading treatment, as well as the applicant’s right to liberty, security and a fair trial.

Turkey’s approach to upholding this ruling will be seen by many as a test of its commitment to the universal applicability of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, irrespective of ethnic or political status.

DISAPPEARANCES

During the 1990s, hundreds of human rights defenders, journalists and opposition political party representatives in the Kurdish region of south-east Turkey ‘disappeared’, often after last being seen in the custody of Turkish security forces. Far from aiming to achieve reconciliation, the Turkish government has impeded investigations into these disappearances. Sadly, such incidents still occur today.

This year, we secured justice in seven disappearance cases. Each was brought by relatives of the disappeared men and represented the final landmarks in lengthy legal battles.

Three of the cases concerned representatives of opposition political parties that had taken up the Kurdish issue and subsequently experienced harassment and ill-treatment from the authorities.

• Hüseyin Koku was a prominent politician with the Democracy Party (DEP) and later the People’s Democracy Party (HADEP). He was abducted by armed police officers in 2004 because of his involvement with HADEP. He suffered inhuman and degrading treatment and was found dead six months later. The ECtHR said that it was unclear whether state agents had killed him, but that he had not been sufficiently protected and that the authorities had failed to investigate his disappearance and death.

• Serdar Tanı̇ş and Ebubekir Deniz, both prominent members of the People’s Democratic Party (DEHAP) and of Kurdish origin, were requested to go to the Silopi police station in August 2000. In January 2001, both men disappeared. The ECtHR found that Turkey’s failure to provide a credible explanation for the disappearances violated the right to life and that the right to a fair trial and the prohibition of torture and inhuman and degrading treatment had also been breached.

- Mehmet Şen was leading member of the DEP party and a mayoral candidate for which he suffered police intimidation. The case was brought by his wife, Nuray Sen. On 25 March 1994, he was abducted by plain-clothes police officers, tortured, shot and killed. Turkey was found to have violated the left (From top): Jonathan Sugden (Human Rights Watch), Tahir Elci (Diyarbakir Bar Association) and Mark Muller (KHRP, BHRC) attend strategy meeting on internal displacement and compensation, Diyarbakir, 2005 right to life for its failure to investigate the killing of the applicant’s husband. In 2005, we undertook further work on the case following the Strasbourg court’s 2004 judgment condemning the Turkish Government.

We also worked on behalf of the relatives of many people who disappeared who were not involved in human rights or political work:

- Attila Osmanoğlu disappeared in March 1995 after eyewitnesses saw him being taken away by armed policemen. His father complains that his petitions to local authorities seeking answers about Attila’s fate have been ignored. We submitted a new case to the ECtHR complaining of multiple breaches of his human rights. The case has been communicated to the Turkish government.

- Abdulkadir Çelikbilek was abducted by plain-clothes police officers in December 1994. He was killed and his body found on a rubbish heap near a cemetery eight days later. The ECtHR judged that Turkey was responsible for his death and had violated the right to an effective remedy. The Turkish Government failed to provide documents about the case and this allowed the Court to draw inferences regarding their involvement in the victim’s death.

- İhsan Haran was witnessed being abducted from his village by security forces in 1994. His wife Nesibe brought the case after being repeatedly prevented from finding out where her husband was and from petitioning local courts. The ECtHR agreed that the authorities had not investigated İhsan Haran’s disappearance and there had accordingly been violations of the right to life, as well as other rights under the Convention.

- Mehdi Akdeniz was detained after Turkish security forces arrived at his hamlet, Semversen in 1994. Villagers were ordered out of their homes which were burned and destroyed. Mehdi was beaten, tortured and never seen again. The Court found that the Turkish Government was responsible for his disappearance and death; for torture and ill-treatment and for failing to conduct an effective investigation.

- Aydin Kişmir was arrested and died after six days in custody in October 1994. The Court ruled that Aydin died from the injuries he suffered whilst in police custody and that Turkey was responsible for his death.

- Ender Toğcu was a hotel and club manager. In 1994 he was taken into custody by security forces and was never seen again. The Court was unable to be sure who was responsible for Ender’s disappearance but found that the Turkish government had violated the right to life and the right to an effective remedy by responding inadequately.

- Yasin Ateş was shot and killed in June 1995 allegedly while in police custody. The Turkish Government claimed that he died in crossfire between the Kurdistan Workers Party (PKK) and security forces. While the Court could not conclusively say that Yasin had died in custody, it did find the authorities responsible. Their response was found to have violated his right to liberty and that Yasin’s father had been prevented from challenging his killing.

- Mehmet Şah Şeker was 23-years-old when he was abducted and disappeared. In the month before, he had been involved in a fight with policemen and had been followed and suffered threats from the police. His father believes that the circumstances surrounding his son’s abduction and disappearance violated the ECHR. In February, the case was unanimously declared admissible and we continued our correspondence with the Court and applicant throughout 2005.

EXTRAJUDICIAL KILLINGS

In international law the circumstances in which a person’s life can be taken are strictly construed. Often, particularly in conflict situations, authorities act outside of their legal authority. We are determined to bring an end to such lawless killings.

Our work on individual cases has included:

- Ahmet Kaymaz was a lorry driver who, together with his 12-year-old son Ugur, was shot dead outside his home by plain-clothed policemen in November 2004. We conducted a field investigation on the incident in conjunction with the Bar Human Rights Committee of England and Wales (BHRC) and gathered evidence that contradicted the official account of events. Our report ‘Thirteen Bullets – Extrajudicial Killings in South-east Turkey’ was published in March. In October we pursued the case by observing the trial of Turkish security officers involved in the killings. Our investigation found that there was no effective criminal accountability for the killings.

- Siyar Perinçek was the son of a member of the Human Rights Association (IHD) board of directors who was shot in the back by a security officer after falling from his motorbike in May 2004. He died later in hospital. We observed the trial of three security officers for the alleged extrajudicial killing and the torture or ill-treatment of a key witness and found strong evidence to support the claim that there had been violations of domestic and international law. (See ‘Relatives of Human Rights Defenders at Risk – the Extrajudicial Killing of Siyar Perinçek’ February 2005).

- Kamil Menteşe, Yusuf Bozkus, Resit Demirhan and Vahap Maco were abducted and later found dead in May 1994 when soldiers entered their village in the province of Diyarbakir. The soldiers were accused of being responsible for their deaths and for village destruction. The Court found insufficient evidence to state that the security forces... were responsible but agreed that there had been a breach of the right to an effective remedy.

- Pakize Uzun was killed in September 1994 in a shell explosion. Her son, Kaamil, complained to his local police department but alleges that the authorities did not investigate his mother’s death or identify the person responsible for the explosion. The Court found the claim sufficient enough to communicate it to the Turkish Government in April 2005.

FAILURE TO INVESTIGATE

The state is not only obliged to respect an individual’s substantive right to life, but also to adequately investigate circumstances where individual’s rights may have been violated in this way. The protection of the law and its enforcers must extend to all people, regardless and without discrimination.

We have several cases in which relatives of the deceased allege that authorities failed to investigate the deaths or killings adequately, denying them of answers. These include:

- Mesut Dünder, a Turkish citizen of Kurdish origin, was mentally disabled. He enjoyed Kurdish music and poetry and wearing Kurdish colours on national holidays. His father believes these expressions of national identity drew the attention of the police, who began following Mesut. Eyewitnesses saw four armed men, one of whom was a police officer, strangling Mesut; there were even photographs of his body being dragged behind an armoured personnel carrier by soldiers. His father believes that his son was killed by state agents and that the authorities had not carried out an effective investigation. After a 10-year legal challenge, the ECtHR finally denounced Turkey for failing to carry out “any meaningful investigation, let alone an adequate and effective one” into the circumstances of Mesut’s death. The Court also found that Turkey had violated the right to life.

- Ali Ekber Kanlibas was found dead in 1996 following a police operation. He had been severely mutilated. His brother complains that he had been subject to torture or ill-treatment prior to his death. In December, the Court held unanimously that there had been violations of the right to life and prohibition of torture.

Information Requests

We have an extensive resources library on human rights in the Kurdish regions, packed with thou-ousands of articles, reports, documents and books from all around the world.

As an objective source of advice and information about the situation in the Kurdish regions, we receive numerous requests for information from academics, researchers, human rights defenders, victims or survivors of human rights abuse, lawyers, journalists and interested members of the public. We aim to share our expertise and knowledge as widely as possible, and, where possible, respond to all such requests within ten days.

On an ad hoc basis, we provide independent expert reports in asylum cases which evaluate the case and, where applicable, the government’s reasons for refusal (see Migrants, Refugees and Asylum
To maintain our independence, we do not accept money from any organisations or institutions, governmental or non-governmental, in the Kurdish regions – or anyone with ties to them. Our funding derives from charitable grantmaking trusts and foundations and non-statutory sources. In addition we receive money from a number of private institutions and individuals.

H W Fisher and Company Limited, Independent Auditors
Our work is based on responses to locally and regionally voiced concerns. We work in partnership with survivors of human rights violations and their defenders, and aims to link our local and regional programmes with international advocacy initiatives.

Where possible, we encourage strategic networking and issue-based alliances. Joint activities frequently include the sharing of information and advice in litigation, the provision of training, human rights monitoring through trial observations and fact-finding missions, and preparation of joint reports which are circulated among national and international decision and policy makers.

In addition to forging new relationships with Civilization Development Organisation, Hawlati, Khatuzeen Center for Social Action, Kurdish Human Rights Watch, Women Media and Education Centre and NAWA in Iraq; the Xorhelat Institute in Iran; the Centre for Civic Initiatives and Human Rights Centre in Azerbaijan, this included specifically working with the following regional partners in 2005:

Thank You

Individuals

We also thank all our applicants and those on the advisory board, board of patrons, board of directors, staff, interns and volunteers, past and present.

Organisations

We also thank all our partner organisations.
Our supporters not only help protect the lives of 30 million people; they support the advancement of human rights on a global level. We will continue fighting injustice and changing the law for as long as injustice continues – but we need your support.

Please consider helping us in one of the following ways.

Give regularly

Become a Friend of KHRP - regular donations are vitally important. Ongoing support allows us to plan with confidence for the future. With regular support, we can provide not only immediate relief to victims of human rights abuse, but also challenge its long-term and underlying causes. Details about how to give are provided overleaf. You can also opt to receive our quarterly newsletter updates.

Give now

Make a difference with a one-off payment today, and we’ll put it to good use straight away. Details about how to give are provided overleaf. You can also opt to receive our quarterly newsletter updates.
Legacies

The drawing up of a will, or the adding of codicil to an existing will, is a serious and personal matter. But, once family and other loved ones are catered for, a bequest to a charity is one way of ensuring that the causes you espouse during your lifetime continue to flourish. A legacy to a charity is also tax-efficient in that it is exempt from inheritance tax and does not count as part of an estate.

Grants and Trusts

We rely on charitable trusts, foundations and institutions to help us obtain redress for victims and survivors of human rights abuse. You can help by advising us of the names of contacts at private or government trusts and other grant-making bodies or nominating us for funds from trusts/companies that do not accept unsolicited nominations.

Corporate

We welcome support from companies who want to see a future based on hope, tolerance and social justice. Many companies choose to support a cause by nominating a particular charity for its support over the year. Payroll giving is another easy way to make tax-efficient and regular donations direct from your gross pay to KHRP. We are happy to come to the workplace to talk to staff about our charity, and the company can even match those donations given by staff to boost the contribution. Encourage your staff to start donating today!

Raising Awareness

We firmly believe that if people knew the extent of the human rights abuses in the Kurdish regions, they could be stopped. If you are able to arrange or invite us to a speaking event, to provide details of press or media contacts or to disseminate flyers about our work at your event, please contact us.

Other Ways of Giving

Your time commitment may be more valuable to us than a financial donation. If you can contribute your time, please contact us. Set your search engine to www.everyclick.com and literally every click will generate income for us. Shopping online from retailers including Amazon and Comet at www.buy.at/khrp will also allow us to benefit from every purchase, at no cost to yourself.

“Kerim and KHRP have succeeded in changing the landscape for the world’s 28 million Kurds.”

_Sigrid Rausing Trust_

“The Kurdish regions have been the scene of terrible crimes. Information has been sparse, and reaction far too limited. Throughout these years, the careful and judicious work of the KHRP has been an invaluable resource for understanding the events that have been taking place, their backgrounds and roots, and the opportunities for constructive action. These have been outstanding contributions. They will be all the more important in the difficult days that surely lie ahead.”

_Professor Noam Chomsky_

“No organisation has had more impact both in Strasbourg at the European Court of Human Rights, and in Turkey’s political-legal configuration.”

_Stephen Solly QC, barrister_

“KHRP’s work in bringing cases to the European Court of Human Rights, seeking justice for the victims of human rights violations including torture and extra-judicial killings, has been groundbreaking. In many of these cases the European Court of Human Rights has concluded that the Turkish authorities have violated individuals’ rights under the European Convention on Human Rights. Amnesty International salutes the work of this organisation… in defending human rights.”

_Kate Allen, Director Amnesty International UK_
